the natives in hustling for a livelihood was forcibly illustrated on the arrival of the English steamer Parisian at Portland. Among the Parisian's passengers was an Italian seissors grinder, who stood near the gangway with his machine on his back, and who was one of the first to set foot on the wharf. If he had any "first improsof them as did Max O'Rell and other distinguished foreigners. He had no baggage to look after, other than his apparatus for putting an edge on things, and being free from care bewas naturally lightlicarted and guy. He didn't bother his head about booking up a boarding house, but at once oiled up his machine, placed his tools in readiness for use, and within thirty minutes after getting on shore he was men going up India street ringing his bell for business. A somnolent cabman was enjoying a comfortable map on his box, in the Rue de Metz when an enterprising person came along cut the reins, unharnessed the steed of the alceping Jehu, mounted the animal and tried to gallop it up the Faubourg Saint Martin. The nag. however, was almost as sleepy as its master, and refused to proceed at a pace fast enough to enable the street brigand to get away.

The cabman having been aroused from his slumbe s by a good Samaritan who had observed the thief, rubbed his eyes and tried to ornament his features with a fooble amile, which was accompanied by a muttered malediction.
